Dollar Index vs US$INR

- US dollar rallied amid risk aversion in the US markets and on expectations that Fed will aggressively hike rates. Market sentiments were hurt on concern over rising inflation and slowing growth in China, which is second largest economy in the world. Higher inflation is weighing on companies and consumers, while monetary tightening in major countries in the world threaten to drag on growth
- Rupee future maturing on April 27 appreciated by 0.17% yesterday amid rise in risk appetite in the domestic markets and softening of crude oil prices
- Rupee is expected to depreciate today on the back of strong dollar and pessimistic global market sentiments. Market sentiments were hurt on concerns over rising inflationary pressure, global supply chain disruption and resurgence of Covid-19 cases in China and strict lockdown impacting global economic growth. Additionally, FI outflows and surge in crude oil prices will hurt domestic currency

- Euro depreciated by 0.65% yesterday majorly on the back of firm dollar and risk aversion in the domestic market. Further, euro slipped on expectations that ECB will move more slowly than Fed in raising interest rates. Additionally, investors fear over the economic impact of war in Ukraine. Furthermore, euro plunged on news that Russian gas supplies under Yamal contract to Poland have been halted
- Euro is expected to trade with negative bias amid strong dollar and weak global market sentiments. Further, euro may slip on divergence in monetary policy and on expectation of disappointing economic data from Germany. Moreover, investors fear that EU is already struggling with higher inflation and slower economic growth and on top of its Russian ban on gas supply to Poland and Bulgaria will inflame energy prices. EURINR (May) is expected to trade in a range of 81.80-82.30
- Pound depreciated by 1.22% yesterday amid strong dollar and concerns about Britain economic outlook. Further, investors continued to unwind their bets for aggressive rate hike by BOE. Furthermore, data showed government borrowing in the recently ended financial year was almost 20% higher than forecast by country's budget office
- Pound is expected to trade with negative bias on the back of strong dollar and risk aversion in the global markets. Furthermore, investors are careful ahead of next policy meet to see whether BOE will increase the borrowing cost when Britain is already facing cost of living crisis. Additionally, expectation of disappointing economic data from country will hurt pound. GBPINR (May) is expected to trade in a range of 96.70-97.30.
