Dollar Index vs US$INR

- The US dollar rallied yesterday amid risk aversion in global markets. Additionally, investors remained cautious ahead of the outcome of midterm elections and CPI data from the US as they may impact US Federal Reserve policy decision
- Rupee future maturing on November 28 appreciated by 0.55% yesterday on the back of weakness in the dollar, softening of crude oil prices and FII inflows
- The rupee is expected to trade with a negative bias on pessimistic global market sentiments and re-bounce in dollar. Further, market participants are awaiting the results of US midterm elections and US CPI data. So far, results shows that Republicans are making gains in the House while Senate control still hangs in the balance. US CPI data is likely to show that inflation remained elevated at 8.0% in October 2022. Meanwhile, consistent FII inflows and decline in crude oil prices may support the rupee. US$INR (November) is expected to trade in a range of 81.30-81.80

- The Euro slipped yesterday mainly on the back of a strong dollar and risk aversion in global markets. Meanwhile, sharp downside in the single currency was cushioned as the European Central Bank is likely to continue its rate hikes further to combat soaring inflation. Bundesbank President Joachim Nagle said the governing council of the ECB will continue to push ahead with monetary policy normalisation even as growth suffers in the eurozone
- The Euro is expected to trade with a negative bias amid strong dollar and pessimistic global market sentiments. Additionally, the single currency may slip on expectations of disappointing economic data from the euro area. EURUSD is facing strong resistance near 1.001 levels and has failed to breach that level twice. As long as it sustains below this level EURUSD may slip back to 0.9900 levels
- The pound depreciated yesterday amid strong dollar and risk aversion in the global markets. Further, investors remained cautious ahead of the UK government's fiscal statement due next week. British Finance Minister Jeremy Hunt is expected to raise taxes and slash spending
- The pound is expected to trade with a negative bias mainly on the back of strong dollar and gloomy global market sentiments. Additionally, the market awaits the outcome of the US midterm election and CPI data from the country as it may further shape Federal Reserve decision on rate hikes. GBPUSD is facing strong resistance near 1.1630 levels and has failed to breach that level multiple times. As long as it sustains below this level pound may slip back to 1.1250 levels. GBPINR (November) is expected to trade in a range of 92.60-93.40
